Notes from the Field

Hello shareholders!

The weather has again thrown us a loop in the form of a very cold night (-5), with more cold and snow in the forecast for the next four days. Needless to say, this makes harvesting produce rather a greater challenge than normal for us and our team, and it may spell the end for some of the more sensitive crops which will not recover from the cold and frost. Nonetheless, we are still harvesting a great deal of delicious produce and looking forward to the nicer weather which is forecast for next week. Hopefully, this will allow us to finish harvesting both our grain crops and most of the root crops we still have left in the ground and will allow us to start putting fields and garden plots to bed for the winter.

We hope you enjoy this week's Thanksgiving share. Happy eating and Happy Thanksgiving!

A wagon full of cauliflower, picked before the hard frost.

Food for Thought.

A true open pollinated plant. Half Broccoli & Half Romanesco. Who will be the lucky one who gets this in their box this week?
